doubt in the back room; he paid them no attention. "Hound," he thought. He spoke the summoning. The boy shook his head at each question. He shut his eyes; his mouth was already shut. He stood. "Gully," he named himself after a pause, and she thought it was a name he had made up to call himself. It did not fit him. Nothing about him fit together, made a whole. Yet she felt no distrust of him. She was easy with him. He meant no harm to her. She thought there was kindness in him, the way he spoke of the animals. He would have a way with them, she thought. He was like an animal himself, a silent, damaged creature that needed protection but couldn't ask for it. "I'll take those names from you, Irioth, but not your own." He looked about, curious and wary. All over the hill spark-weed was in flower, its long petals. "Probably not," the wizard said, and then, appearing to notice Diamond, put down his pen and said, "can fly up, fly up into the Courts of the King. Come along, come along, up into his tower, where. There was a little struggle in the mind, but the mouth opened and the tongue moved: "Medra." wherever here was, or anywhere. There had been black roads and dropping slopes and a vast green. They held each other tight, hard, silent for a long time. To Diamond it was as if he held his future, his own life, his whole life, in his arms. furiously. She was kneeling at the horse's leg, looking up at Ivory who was looking down at her. A curl of fire, a wisp of smoke drifted down through the dark air. For there had been times when he felt that, as he had summoned her living, so dead she might summon him. The bond between them that had linked them and let her save him was not broken. Many times she had come into his dreams, standing silent as she stood when he first saw her in the reeking tower at Samory. And he had seen her, years ago, in the vision of the dying healer in Telio, in the twilight, beside the wall of stones. pouch made of a sheep's stomach. They were very poor people. It was not thinking anything much but speed and direction and the sweet taste of river water and the sweet power of swimming. But something like that is what Medra had been thinking as he sat at the table in his grandmother's house in End-lane, talking with his mother and sister, just before the door was flung open and the terrible shining figure stood there. A division of people here well know. "all the workers at Adapt, knew better -- that we were decidedly different. This differentness was. Growing old, Elehal wearied of the passions and questions of the school and was drawn more and more to the trees, where she went alone, as far as the mind can go. Medra walked there too, but not so far as she, for he was lame. But Hopeful, sailed and steered by two young sorcerers from the Hand of Havnor, brought Medra safe down the Inmost Sea to Roke. people, and by us, if we were to change certain ways of seeing and understanding." We thought the breath he breathed was left from some spell of his own art that we did not understand, like the spell snakes know that keeps their heart beating long after they are dead. Though it seemed terrible to bury a breathing body, yet he was cold, and his blood did not run, and no soul was in him. That was more terrible. So we made ready to bury him. And then, by his grave, his eyes opened. He moved, and spoke. He said, "I have summoned myself again into life, to do what must be done." "Get back, you black-hearted bitch!" she yelled. "Home, you crawling traitor!" And the dogs fell. She looked at him and at the Doorkeeper and said nothing.
