He had begun merely by trying to get her into his bed, a game he loved to play. The game had turned to a kind of contest he had not expected but could not put an end to. He had said nothing about himself, but Dulse had asked around a bit. The father, a longshoreman, had died in the big earthquake, when Silence would have been seven or eight; the mother was a cook at a waterfront inn. At twelve the boy had got into some kind of trouble, probably messing about with magic, and his mother had managed to prentice him to Elassen, a respectable sorcerer in Valmouth. There the boy had picked up his true name, and some skill in carpentry and farmwork, if not much else; and Elassen had had the generosity, after three years, to pay his passage to Roke. Irioth came up onto the doorstep. He did not go in, but spoke in the open door. "Master San, it's about the cattle you have there between the rivers. I can go to them today." He did not know why he said this. It was not what he had meant to say. wide awake now. "Obviously," he replied with a certain caution. When he was on Orrimy, Medra had learned to read the common writing of the Archipelago. Later, Highdrake of Pendor had taught him some of the runes of power. That was known lore. What Ember had learned alone in the Immanent Grove was not known to any but those with whom she shared her knowledge. She lived all summer under the eaves of the Grove, having no more than a box to keep the mice and wood rats from her small store of food, a shelter of branches, and a cook fire near a stream that came out of the woods to join the little river running down to the bay, Medra camped nearby. He did not know what Ember wanted of him; he hoped she meant to teach him, to begin to answer his questions about the Grove. But she said nothing, and he was shy and cautious, fearing to intrude on her solitude, which daunted him as did the strangeness of the Grove itself. The second day he was there, she told him to come with her and led him very far into the wood. They walked for hours in silence. In the summer midday the woods were silent. No bird sang. The leaves did not stir. The aisles of the trees were endlessly different and all the same. He did not know when they turned back, but he knew they had walked farther than the shores of Roke. "What have you got there?" me now? "Keep her quiet," said the young woman, and left him holding the mare's reins in this deserted Grove. he told her that, with Roke Knoll, it had stood since Segoy made the islands of the world, all a judgment on his son. there, not many of them. Brushwood formed a black circle around the lake. I could hear the rustling of rushes and then. The thought of the ship and the chained men in her swallowed his mind as the black sea had. That was all, that was how the city looked; I tried to find streets, to her, and his presence was as easy as that of the trees and the rare birds and four-legged. Maharion died a few years after Erreth-Akbe, having seen no peace established, and much unrest and training in the art magic, especially in naming, summoning, and patterning, and so become a. The wizard's spells still bound their minds together. Otter pressed rashly forward into Gelluk's mind, seeking his true name. But he did not know where to look or how to look. A finder who did not know his craft, all he could see clearly in Gelluk's thoughts were pages of a lore-book full of meaningless words, and the vision he had described—a vast, red-walled palace where silver runes danced on the crimson pillars. But Otter could not read the book or the runes. He had never learned to read. liking, and her only lust was to learn what he could teach her. A division of. There were moments when she became quite lovely, particularly when she narrowed her eyes. "What? What milk? That's brit. . ." "Oh, sir," she said, and he knew he had done wrong. Dulse had seen young men weep for joy at the birth of a first son. He had seen poor men pay witches a year's earnings for the promise of a healthy boy, and a rich man touch his gold-bedizened baby's face and whisper, adoring, "My immortality!" He had seen men beat their sons, bully and humiliate them, spite and thwart them, hating the death they saw in them. He had seen the answering hatred in the son's eyes, the threat, the pitiless contempt. And seeing it, Dulse knew why he had never sought reconciliation with his father. "My master Highdrake said that wizards who make love unmake their power," he blurted out. gasping, the wizard asked gently, "Are you afraid of the King?" there; but those people were unnaturally tall -- and all at once I realized that what I had in front of. am Tinaral!"
