All at once he looked straight at Otter, who froze in terror thinking the wizard possessed by a feeling of incredible alienation. I looked up at the stewardess, who had stopped by. "No, thank you." "But I can come," she said. The wizard who called himself Gelluk and the pirate who called himself King Losen had worked together for years, each supporting and increasing the other's power, each in the belief that the other was his servant. Medra knew only a hint of this story from Ember. One night Veil, who was three years older than Ember and to whom the memory was much clearer, told it to him fully. Ember sat with them, listening in silence. must come through you to her it belongs to. That's the power, the way it works. It's all like. It was hard work out in the pastures. "Who doesn't do hard work?" Emer had asked, showing her witches a year's earnings for the promise of a healthy boy, and a rich man touch his gold. "They don't need a weatherworker on a night like this, and they haven't paid me yet," Medra said. "But surely you can't tell?" The wind blew, the long grass nodded in the wind. Summer was getting on and the grass was dry now, yellowing, no flowers in it but the little white heads of the lacefoam. A woman came walking up the hill towards him through the long grass. She followed no path, and walked easily, without haste. sea, A seabird flying in the grave. noise. She wanted to cry but she had never been good at crying. She stood and watched the water. She thought he was clever and quite handsome, but she didn't think much about him, except for what he was hungry most of the time. Not till he could take an hour and run back down to the docks. "Thorion says Lebannen is not truly king, since no Archmage crowned him." This time the Doorkeeper nodded. He smiled faintly and said, "So it would seem." Silence bowed his rough, thoughtful head. "Darkrose," he breathed in her ear, his secret name for her. "Ah," he said. He looked away so that she could not see his expression. the hillside with its grass and bushes in the last of the sunlight, but there was no entrance. "I don't understand! Explain this to me. It struck with one huge thunderclap out of sudden utter blackness and wild rain. The ship pitched like a horse rearing and then rolled so hard and far that the mast broke loose from its footing, though the stays held. The sail struck the water, filled, and pulled the galley right over, the great sweeps sliding in their oarlocks, the chained slaves struggling and shouting on their benches, barrels of oil breaking loose and thundering over one another-pulled her over and held her over, the deck vertical to the sea, till a huge storm wave struck and swamped her and she sank. All the shouting and screaming of men's voices was suddenly silent. There was no noise but the roar of the rain on the sea, lessening as the freak wind passed on eastward. Through it one white seabird beat its wings up from the black water and flew, frail and desperate, to the north. choppy seas, but never a storm or a troublesome wind. "Now you," Diamond said to Rose, and she started to do what he had done, but the rock only twitched a little. "Oh," she whispered, "there's your dad." "Listen, Nais. . . I think I'll go now. Really. It will be better that way." "I thought that that would. . . suit you." "How goes it, col?" Diamond's face shone. "I don't know. I'm after bigger prey." So it was. For the rest of his life, Medra kept the doors of the Great House on Roke. The garden door that opened out upon the Knoll was long called Medra's Gate, even after much else had changed in that house as the centuries passed through it. And still the ninth Master of Roke is the Doorkeeper. Glosses of Danemer and the Arcana of the Enlades, and kept his mouth closed. He listened. He heard. arrived. If the young sorcerer was seeking experience, he did not get much at Westpool. Whenever Birch had guests from Kembermouth or from neighboring domains, the herd of deer, the swans, and the fountain of golden wine made their appearance. He also worked up some very pretty fireworks for warm spring evenings. But if the managers of the orchards and vineyards came to the Master to ask if his wizard might put a spell of increase on the pears this year or maybe charm the black rot off the Fanian vines on the south hill, Birch said, "A wizard of Roke doesn't lower himself to such stuff. Go tell the village sorcerer to earn his keep!" And when the youngest daughter came down with a wasting cough, Birch's wife dared not trouble the wise young man about it, but sent humbly to Rose of Old Iria, asking her to come in by the back door and maybe make a poultice or sing a chant to bring the girl back to health..the roar of the rain on the sea, lessening as the freak wind passed on eastward.
